

will rub your eyes and wonder if after all you are in the Philippines. To a surprising extent the Igorots and other mountaineers of the Philippines resemble the American Indians. Color, a copperish brown⁵ hair, coarse and black; high cheek bones $ none too clean, with the women carrying their babies on their backs—that is the Igorot—and that is the American Indian.

The pagans of the southern islands, like the Mangyans in Mindoro and the Bajaos or sea gypsies of Mindanao and Sulu, are not very much farther advanced in civilization than the Negritos. On the other hand, in Mindanao the Bagobos and others like them are a handsome people with many good qualities.

Some of the pagans have proved adaptable to education. One for example, Dr. Hilary Clapp, has been a member of the Philippine Legislature. Another, Dr. Jose Carino, was graduated from the University of Chicago and was a member of the Constitutional Convention. The possibilities of advancement for some of the pagans would, therefore, seem to be as great as for any other people.
